01.The brief

About Edenmere & Co.

A boutique investment advisory firm serving high-net-worth individuals, family offices, and founder-led businesses navigating liquidity events.

The firm manages $380M in assets under advisement across private equity co-investments, real estate debt, and structured wealth planning.

Has grown for
8 years

Operates with a team of 9 members

Limit their clients to
60 relationships

02.The Problem

“A referred prospect visits Edenmere’s website needing to feel that the firm matches the reputation and caliber the referral implied, but they are unable to form that confidence because the current site fails to communicate Edenmere’s quality of thinking, depth of relationships, or understanding of their specific situation.

This leads to a prospect who leaves uncertain, unconvinced, and unable to justify taking the next step with a firm that may have been exactly the right fit for them.”

03.Personas

Jessica L.

A high-net-worth individual arriving via personal referral, already carrying a baseline of trust. They are not shopping - they are checking whether the firm matches the reputation the referrer implied. Their goal is to feel confident the call is worth their time.

Ryan G.

A professional investment officer conducting structured due diligence on behalf of a family office. They arrive skeptical by default and will leave immediately if positioning is vague or credentials are thin. Their goal is to find enough proof points to justify adding Edenmere to a formal shortlist

Christie A.

A founder navigating a liquidity event for the first time, arriving emotionally charged and allergic to anything that feels generic or transactional. They do not want to be treated as a wealthy individual - they want to feel seen as someone in a specific, complex life moment. Their goal is to find a firm that will treat them as a thinking partner, not a portfolio to manage

04.Research Questions

01	What specific cues - visual, verbal, structural - signal "institutional quality" and "personal discretion" to each visitor segment?	In-depth interviews, Competitive benchmarking, Current site Audit
02	How do visitors recognize and interpret selectivity signals? What reads as "premium and exclusive" vs. "vague and evasive"?	In-depth interviews, Competitive benchmarking
03	What content do visitors expect to find, and what do they respect not finding?	In-depth interviews, Card sorting exercise
04	What would actually move a visitor to take action after visiting the site?	In-depth interviews
05	What makes a visitor feel this is a relationship-led firm, not a product or transaction-driven one?	In-depth interviews, Competitive analysis

HMW

01

How might we show Edenmere’s quality of thinking to a referred prospect before any human conversation takes place?

02

How might we prove the quality of Edenmere’s client relationships when the proof is confidential?

03

How might we make each referred prospect feel that the firm already understands their specific situation the moment they arrive on the site?

- I chose HMW #1 because:
- It attacks the core problem directly
 - It works for all three personas at once
 - It is the most realistic starting point given what we know
 - It sets up HMW 02 and 03 naturally

05.Design Direction

✗ The Unpitch

The prospect arrives already pre-qualified by someone they trust. If the first thing the site does is list reasons people do not belong, it introduces doubt where confidence should be building. That works against the core problem we are solving.

✗ The Letter Instead of a Homepage

The letter format was compelling precisely, it promises a direct, personal voice. But without knowing who is visiting, one letter cannot speak equally to three personas in completely different headspaces. Faking personalization at this stage would undermine the very trust we are trying to build.

✓ No Services Pages

Referred prospects arrive with high expectations but no context about the firm. They need to feel Edenmere thinks differently before a single conversation happens. Replacing the services list with how the firm thinks and what problems it solves lets the quality of reasoning speak before credentials do.

06. Visual Identity

Edenmere & Co.

Eden

- From the biblical Garden of Eden
- Carries connotations of sanctuary, abundance, and a place set apart from the ordinary world

Mere

- Old English and French origin
- Means a body of still water, a lake
- Also used as a suffix in old English place names
- To signal something established, rooted, geographic

& Co.

- Implies partnership, not a solo practice
- Law firms, accounting houses, private banks have used this suffix for centuries
- It says "we have been here a while" without having to say it explicitly

Quiet Luxury & Authority

Edenmere & Co. does not need to announce its credibility. This design direction reflects a firm that has earned its reputation through decades of considered relationships, not marketing.

Website Structure

Edenmere & Co — One Page Landing

0. Letter Entry

First impression. Visitors feel like they are invited

1. Opening Statement

Tone and positioning.

2. How We Think

Philosophy over services.

3. The People

Edenmere's members in their own voice.

4. The Reading Room

Thinking proven over time.

5. Contact + Footer

A direct, low-pressure path to conversation.

Letter Entry

The first thing users see is a sealed envelope, creating the feeling of being privately invited. Clicking the envelope opens the landing page experience.

08. Testing Report

01	User control and freedom	Skip button is hidden for 900ms with zero feedback, then appears as "Enter" (confusing label — implies entering something, not skipping an animation).	Fixed
02	Error prevention	The Contact section has no form at all. Users are given only an email address and phone number — both require them to leave the site and initiate contact in a separate app	Will build later
03	Help users recognize, diagnose, recover from errors	No contact form means no inline validation or error messaging at all. If the email link fails silently (mailto not configured, mobile webmail mismatch), the user has no recovery path. Phone number is static text — not a tel: link on mobile.	Will build later
